

Tessa Fights Robots

Subscribe

Social Credit Piloted in Italy: World Economic Forum's 'Agile Nations' in Action

Transparent citizens and private billionaires.

Tessa Lena Apr 22, 2022 77 24

This story is a quick note about another sly thing happening under the leadership of the World Economic Forum. I am writing a proper long article about it but for now, a few interesting bits.

You might have heard about a new digital municipal app being launched in Bologna, Italy—the one that includes a social credit score. Of course, currently this initiative is still in its “honey moon” phase, which means that as it launches, it is non-mandatory, and comes with no punitive measures (not yet) but with special incentives for “virtuous” deeds such as using public transportation or not using too much energy.

Some of the stories I’ve read about it say that this system is the first social credit system in Europe.

© 2022 Tessa Lena · Privacy · Terms · Collection notice

Publish on SubstackGet the app

Substack is the home for great writing

Leveraging Salesforce Service Cloud and Marketing Cloud will deliver omni-channel self-service capabilities, seamless collaboration between local government departments, and empower citizens to receive the information they need faster through AI-powered chatbots.

The launch of the MyRhome platform is another step on the Municipality's path to creating a “smart city” — an ecosystem of public and private stakeholders serving citizens wherever they are.

Oh and look, who is on the very important WEF Board of Trustees, is it Marc Benioff?

Another thing. In 2020, seven countries, in partnership with the WEF, signed an agreement to become “Agile Nations.” Italy is one of them. Other countries are Canada, Denmark, the UK, Japan, Singapore, and UAE.

Source: ArabianBusiness.com

Agile Nations

And of course, “agile governance” is an important part of the World Economic Forum’s governance framework, so it all connects.

Now, in theory, all this agile governance may sound innocent—but in practice, it most certainly stands for a world in which transparent citizens live in a proverbial panopticon, monitored by technology—and billionaires enjoy traditional private lives and their large oceanfront properties, and limit their kids’ access to technology so that they grow up sharp.

Anyway, that’s that. Another trick unfolding! They are just going ahead, like an army of bulldozers! Interesting times!

Write a comment...

Reset is here to remind us about what matters. Perhaps the most important thing we can do to stand up to the Great Reset is to remember how to think with our hearts, to allow our hearts to guide our choices, whatever it means for each person in each circumstance. It may sound simple but for a modern person it is one of the hardest things to do! But I do believe that right now is a very good time to put our brilliant minds at the service of our brilliant hearts.

Tessa Fights Robots is a reader-supported publication. To receive new posts and support my work, consider becoming a free or paid subscriber.

Matt07924

12 hr ago

♥ Liked
by Tessa
Lena

I would not be surprised if this social credit system is tied in with your cell phone. Its how they can track you and monitor you. We may need to seriously consider going Luddite and dropping cell phones to retain our autonomy.

21 Reply Give gift ...

4 replies

Brian @ NoSearch.org Writes NoSearch™ · 12 hr ago ❤️ Liked by Tessa Lena

They need to work out the kinks of dissenters, protests, and revolt. Let's hope Europeans hate it, and them as much as we do.

♡ 16 Reply Give gift ⋮

22 more comments...

Ready for more?

Subscribe